

Harry Potter

Many years ago, a young child was named 'the boy who lived.' This child was called Harry Potter. Harry had no money, no family and consequently, had never been loved. He lived in a cupboard under the stairs at his aunt's house, which was infested with spiders and cobwebs. His Aunt Petunia and Uncle Vernon were vile, vicious, unkind people who only cared about their greedy son, Dudley.

Everyday Harry went to school, which was a welcome escape from his miserable life. Then he would return home and be treated like a slave by the Dursleys. He was cruelly bullied by Dudley and practically starved by his aunt and uncle. But what Harry did not know was that he was a special child. A very special child.

To Harry's surprise, one day he received a visitor. This visitor was like nothing he had ever seen before. He was not quite the size as a giant, yet not as small as a normal human being. Consequently, Harry decided he was a mixture of the two, half giant, half human.

However, this visitor did not arrive quietly. He broke down the door, with immense power, scooped Harry up in his arms and claimed that Harry had been living a lie all his life. This strange, bearded giant then said something, which was truly unbelievable, he claimed that Harry was a wizard.

"Follow me," exclaimed Hagrid, "you're going to Hogwarts."

"What on earth is Hogwarts?" asked Harry, inquisitively.

"What is, what is Hogwarts? Why, it's a wizarding school of course" replied Hagrid, in such shock he could hardly form a sentence. "You'll need some supplies; cauldrons, an owl, robes and books of course."

"But Hagrid, there's one problem, I don't have any money," said Harry, downheartedly.

Hagrid was once again baffled by what was coming out of Harry's mouth. "No money? No money? What on earth have those Dursleys done to you, ya poor lad. Our first stop will be Gringotts, the wizarding bank o' course! Do you really think Lilly 'n' James would have left you with nothin'? You was there pride 'n' joy for goodness sake!"

Harry walked into Gringotts and was completely taken aback. The room was piled high with coins, which shone like golden balls of sun, there was so much to take in. Harry assumed there must be thousands of pounds contained in the vault.

His dreams had come true.

Harry went on to become one of the most famous wizards of the modern age and would be the saviour of the wizarding world against the biggest enemy they had ever faced, Voldemort.